outlining the new understanding Frank B. Kellogg communicated i immediately to the President. Mr. Kellogg said at the time that he not comment upon it until he had heard from the summer White House. Since then it has become apparent that the British note did not contain a very thorough outline of the Franco-British agreement, and that even the State Department was not altogether sure of its details.

Although the State Department has been careful to make no official comment beyond stating that both France and Great Britain had made some concessions to each other and that they had worked out a compromise on global tonnage, it has become known that by far the most important parts of the agreement concern land reserves and cruisers In return for British assent to the maintenance by France of large trained reserves, both agree to practically an unlimited number of light cruisers. They also agree that submarines under 600 tons can be built in unlimited numbers. To the latter compromise the United States has no objection. However, it was the deadlock over an unlimited number of light cruisers which broke up the three-power naval conference at Geneva last summer. Navy officials feel that the

NATION ADVISED TO REFORM ITS VOTING SYSTEM

Excessive Cost Protested at Virginia Institute—Permanent Registration Urged

EPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. - Need for simplification of election machinery, proposed legislation to control campaign expenditures, "methods improvement of municipal government, and the prospects for success of the Pan-American Arbitration Conference to be held in Washington in December, 1928, were discussed at the Institute of Public Affairs in session here.

An unusually large attendance at the round-table on political parties testified to the general public interest in the question of curbing excessive campaign expenditures for the benefit of the candidate and the protection of the voter, and of reducing the cost of complicated election machinery which must be borne by the taxpayer. Finis J. Garrett, Representative from Tennessee and Democratic floor leader of the House, urged the adoption of the state laws forbidding corporations to make political donations either to a candidate or party war chests.

Expectation of Favors

"There can be but one motive for a corporation contributing money in a political campaign - the expectation of favors in legislation or administration," declared Mr. Garrett. "Such contributions are wholly unjustified, are a violation of the rights of corporation stockholders, and should be prohibited by law. Permanent Registration Favored

The adoption of the permanent registration system was urged by several speakers as cheaper, simpler for the voter, and less susceptible to fraudulent manipulation than the system now in use in the United States. The complication of voting machinery in this country, it was suggested, is responsible for the fail ure of many qualified voters to participate in elections.

Maintaining Farm Population Debating the question, "Resolved, That present trends in our agriculture, resulting in a smaller farm population, should be checked," Dr. C. C. The tendency toward growth of the cities at the expense of rural districts was attributed by Dr. Stine to the fact that the average income of the fact that the average income of the farm family is only 73 per cent of what it was in 1919-20, while the average for the factory worker is 102 per cent; that farm land values are steadily falling and that farming is an increasingly hazardous occupation from the financial viewpoint.

Mr. Dickey, in his argument of the negative side, declared that interfering with the free movement of population from country to city would wheep people from finding their most economic employment," and contended that there is no danger of agricultural production falling below the point necessary to meet national needs. The superior element of the farm population, he believed, will renain on the farms. Tariff Policy Blamed

Latin-American Relations

The prospects are encouraging for oncrete achievements by the Washington conference on arbitration to be held in December, it was declared by several speakers at the round-table on "our Latin-American relations."

Prof. I. J. Cox of Northwestern University pointed out that the decision of Frank B. Kellogg, Secretary of State, to use as a basis for further agreement the treaty signed at the Santiago Conference and ratified by the United States Senate in 1927, which provides for arbitration commissions, augurs well for concrete action at the December conference in 7HEN the 57 singers of the Yale University Glee Club and their conductor, Marshall Bartholomew, came on the platform of Queen's Hall on the evening of July 19, they did so with the air of men who mean business. They had only sung their opening song—"Mother of Men," by Seth Bingham—when they made it apparent that their kind of business was to sing as their kind of business was to sing as well as they possibly could. They made it even more apparent as the program progressed. Then they be-came at their ease. Where at first their style was so precise that they might have been singing with "eyes front" while they executed a musicalmilitary evolution, they presently lost that little self-consciousness and evinced a spontaneous fellowship that was first-rate ensemble and

Three Great Masters Compared

The great ceiling of the Sistine Chapel stands apart from, and beyond, all other work; but of all the other Italians, Titian most fully reptheories of his predecessors, and carwho bears the banner"; whether in subject pictures or portraits, his work is perfect in all the qualities of painting, and it may almost be said that he has done with colour all that can be done.

He is the meeting-point of the old and the new. His work combines minuteness and freedom. His early training must have given him the power he possessed of treating detail with the most dainty fineness, yet keeping it always in its place, never letting it appear laboured or ob-

The influence of Titian can be traced in the work of all succeeding painters. Both Velasquez and Rembrandt owe something to him; Velasmore than Rembrandt, as he was better acquainted with his work. But the influence of Titian, of Ru-bens, and of Tintoretto on Velasquez only supplemented, and did not lead him away from his own frank and Straightforward view of nature.

We know . . . that Velasquez had the surest eye and the truest hand of any artist who has ever lived, or at least that he was the equal in this respect of any other artist; but if we look at his early work in the Na-tional Gallery, we find that it is not "clever" in any sense. It is most uncompromising somewhat heavyhanded, one may almost say common in its execution; suggesting not bril-liant ability, but clear insight and determination.

But so much is said of the freedom of Velasquez's painting, and so often is his name used to justify careless and sloppy work, that one may be allowed to draw attention again to the old truth—that this freedom was only gained at the price of labour, greater than most of his worshippers seem willing or able to undertake; and that the charm of his painting is that, with all its freedom, it is so careful and so beautifully drawn. He having, by great labour, learnt what to do, practice gave him a ready means to his end. It is surely, then, a mistaken idea for an artist to think TRÄULEIN ERMA PLACHTE, manner, where he left off. Call money renewed at 6 per cent. dropped to 5½ and thence to 5, the lowest rate in about a month. Loans in the "outside market" were reported as low as 4½ per cent, due to the heavy influx of funds from the interior. Time money was again reported available as low as 6½ per cent.

Expectations of a decrease in brokers' loans in the federal reserve statement to be issued after the close of the market also helped to create bullish sentiment. Reports that federal reserve banks were buying acceptances in the open market lacked confirmation but it was indicated that the federal reserve board had made no change in its money market policy this week. Prospects of heavy crop movements next fall accelerated the buying of the railroad shares. Texas & Pacific and Gulf, Mobile & Northern were bid up 4 points, and Rock Island and Southern Railway 3% points each. Gains of 2 points or more were recorded by New York Central, Reading, Erie, Southern Pacific, Union Pacific and Canadian Pacific.

BOND PRICE READJUSTMENT

Recent Reaction Makes Good Issues More Attractive to Investors

While credit uncertainty still hangs over the market for bonds and recent trading has been restricted by hesitation on the part of buyers, investors appear to have assumed an attitude of watchfulness. Some feel that, given a little time, bond prices may resume their upward trend.

Neglect of bonds, which began and increased with the big bull movement in the stock market, has resulted in an adjustment of prices to levels that, according to students of the situation, are attractive. While credit uncertainty still hangs

Present prices are seen to have been based partly on an oversupply of new bond issues. Underwriters had held back a substantial proportion of these so as not to depress the market. With the decline in new offerings and a gradual absorption on the part of the public, this banking liquidation is not so conspicuous.

public, this banking fluudation is not so conspicuous.

It is also evident that since the volume of stock offerings was increased to meet the demand of a public educated by a boom market, and the volume of new bond issues was decreased, there has been a readjustment of the ratio of fixed-interest-bearing liabilities to stocks. Corporations, therefore, are in a sounder finanof the story of th and correspondingly more secure.

What appeals to the average i What appeals to the average investor more immediately, perhaps, than the foregoing consideration, is the question of yield. The bond market inevitably reflected the ease in money which obtained until quite recently and, at the high levels attained, offered a return which did not appear attractive. The yields of many good issues at present prices, however, are somewhat improved. what improved.

Indications are that the current six months will be the best for earnings in the history of Richfield Oil Co. of California. In the quarter ended June 30 the company was third in gasoline sales in California with 31,838,283 gallons. Consolidation of marketing operations of Pan-American Petroleum Co. under its control will substantially expand sales. Richfield reported net for the six months ended June 30 of $3,210,683, after depreciation, depletion, interest, drilling expenses, abandonments and federal taxes, equivalent, after allowing for dividend requirements on 399,900 shares (par $25) of preferred, to $1.77 a share (par $25) on 1,615,237 shares of common stock outstanding at the end of the period. In the first six months of 1927 it reported profit of $1,483,547 before federal taxes.

WHY CANADA GRAIN RATES ARE LOWER

Ralph Budd Discusses Subject Before Convention

HELENA, Mont.-Speaking before Montana Press Association in annual convention here, Ralph Budd, president of Great Northern Railroad, said:
"When railway service is good and safe as it is now, the only thing to be desired is that it shall be cheaper. I am in accord with that desire, although I feel confident that if railway rates should be made so low that service was impaired, such rates would prove more costly to the shippers than rates sufficient to insure continued good

"The Senate of the United States a few weeks ago asked the Interstate Commerce Commission why it was that the railroads in North Dakota, Montana and other northwestern states charged more for transporting grain to market than railroads in Canada.

"After an investigation the commis In this country there is private owner ship of railways and the railways are wholly dependent upon revenues de-rived by them from transportation. Practically all railroad mileage in Canada is owned by two systems—the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific

"Canadian National owned by the government, failed to earn enough in 1925 to pay the interest on its debt. The deficiency was $42,197,664. And in 1926 it failed to earn its interest by $29,894,072.

Housing Changes at Nice Affecting Beauty of Country

Villas and Suburban Estates Give Place to Flats and Apartment Houses

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR practically all European countries are very strongly felt in southern Russia's trade with England dimin- France and have a tendency to change not only the life of the average private man but even the outer aspect of the principal towns.

Complete Dry A. C. Operation Easily Applied to Battery Receivers

In the rush for the latest A. C. set developments it would seem that the millions of owners of battery operated receivers have become a "lost battalion," cut off and forgotten in the heat of battle. Fortunately, a few concerns have been proceeding in a quiet, orderly way to take care of the needs of these listeners and now the fruits of this research are avail-

Visitors to the annual trade show just held in Chicago were impressed with the fact that the only marked development over last year were the A. C. tube operated receivers and dynamic speakers. Now, both of these things were available in a limited way last year so that this year it merely means that they have come into more general usage and are therefore much more available in the public market.

This being the case it is obvious that electrically and mechanically the better class of battery operated receivers sold during the last two years are every bit as good as the C. jobs. The fan who wants to be relieved of the care of batteries is faced with junking his set or selling it for a song in order to get A. C.

EDINBURGH — It has been announced that Sir Alexander Grant has given a further sum of £100,000 for the erection of a suitable building in which to house the Scottish National Library. In the summer of 1923 the establishment of the National Library was made possible by a gift of the same amount from the present donor, and the Advocates Library became at that time the National Library.

Since its establishment the question of housing has been an urgent one, as the present buildings are in-adequate, and it had been suggested that the unoccupied Calton jail might be adapted. The Royal Commission on Museums and Galleries went into this question but came to the conclusion that the Calton buildings were unsuitable. A proposal is now

Canada bought 19,000,000 tons of coal last year, of which the United States supplied 18,000,000. British coal experts believe that average pithead costs in Britain are not more than 4s, above those of American mines, and that the British transport advantage far outbalances this extra cost. It is believed that the best English and Scottish steams and related grades can be sold in Canada and Newfoundland for under 25s., and the best Welsh steams and bunkers for under 30s. At this price, it is doubtful if American coal shippers would seek the business. From the transportation point of view, there is he possibility of developing a large traffic in Newfoundland iron ore for the blast furnaces of Britain's northeast coast. There are difficulties in the way, but none of them seems insurmount able. The problem of storage during the months when the St. Lawrence is ice-blocked has already been solved by the American coal shippers on the Great Lakes, who accumulate vast supplies of coal during the summer months at the head of the Lakes near Duluth and Superior, and distribute them later by rail.

It is interesting to note that two cargoes of British anthracite have recently been shipped to Boston from the Bristol Channel and are said to have been profitably sold. It is generally agreed that the development of a large trade in British coal with. Canada or the New England States of America would have results reaching far beyond the coal trade. Shipping profits have become so small as to be illusory in many cases, and coal exports would be most welcome to shipowners. SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU WASHINGTON-Harold A. Lafount, radio commissioner, has presented to the Federal Radio Commission a plan for reallocation of radiocasting sta-tions which abolishes no existing stations and yet distributes them equally among the five radio zones equally among the five radio zones. By this, he hopes to show that the Radio Act can be complied with.

The allocation proposal presented by Mr. Lafount is, he believes, the closest approach to the ideal setup which can be made at this time. It abolishes no stations now, but is so drawn that the number can be reduced at any time, if that should be found necessary, without changing the assigned frequencies of the remaining stations." The permanency of the allocation is the feature which Mr. Lafount particularly recommends to his fellow commissioners. "Such interference as develops can be cured by the elimination of stations in the future without upheavel of the remainder of the set-up," he points out. "On account of the apparent public service rendered by all the existing stations, the commission is justified in permitting all to operate under the initial allocation and providing the elimination later of those which give rise to actual impairment of the total service rendered." ment of intermediate class of stations to be known as "district service stations" to serve a district greater than that of a local station and smaller than that of a larger high-power station.

The plan provides for 25 stations having power of 5000 watts and above operating on cleared or exclusive, channels: 40 stations in the capital of that portion of the undertaking which is solely engaged in the conduct of communications, is recommended to be fixed for the purpose of the communications company, while any excess of that sum from the communications service 50 per cent is to go to the company and 50 per cent to reduction of rates or such other purpose as the advisory committee may approve.

French Schools

Beginning in 1881, France enacted number of educational laws which gradually covered the country with public schools offering instruction free of charge, and taught by lay teachers. The Law of Association (1901) forbade a member of any unauthorized order to give instruction in a French school. As the teachers of most of the ecclesiastical and parochial schools were members of "orders" which had never received formal authorization from the state, these schools were obliged to close.

Winston-Salem Journal: Babe Ruth is the modern prophet of family stability. Every time he comes to bat he makes the fans think of home. Big Ben

"Big Ben" of London, perhaps the most famous clock in the world dates from 1858. It has four 23 feet dials and it used to take two men three afternoons a week to wind it. It is now wound by electric motor in 20 minutes.

Liquor in Other Lands

T THE Williamstown Institute of Politics A prohibition has been under discussion, not in its partisan political aspects, but rather in the light of the experiences foreign nations have had in their efforts to control the liquor traffic in some other fashion. No verbatim report of the discussion is at hand, which is unfortunate, since it was participated in by very eminent educators and publicists of the United States and several foreign countries. But from the report of the proceedings published in a prominent New York newspaper which advocates amendment of the prohibition law of the United States, we garner these facts, admitted by advocates of foreign systems.

Dr. Louis Pierard of Belgium, eulogizing the system of control there, nevertheless admitted that, while the poor were denied their alcohol, the wealthy classes can get it without difficulty, and are now drinking more heavily than the less privileged individuals of humbler fortune. The hip flask, the illicit still and speakeasies, he acknowledged, are not unknown. And while the per capita consumption of spirits has been reduced, and that of beers and wines increased, he reported that a stronger type of beers and wines is now being made, which he described mildly as "rather dangerous." One hears much of the virtues of the Canadian law for the government control of liquor selling. Coincidentally with this law, although not necessarily as a result of it, we have observed the interesting phenomenon that, while there is quite a stream of United States tourists going to Canada to drink, there is a very steady procession of Canadian emigrants coming into the United States to live and to work and to establish their fortunes under this country's "reprehensible" system of prohibition. This may not have been discussed at Williamstown, but Prof. C. R. Fay of Toronto University, questioning the value of prohibition, and approving the Canadian system, did admit that what his neighbors wanted, even under the "beneficent" Canadian law, was not light wines and beers which it authorized, for "among the people with whom he had come in contact it was mainly a desire to drink spirits." Perhaps no one present at the moment thought to call the professor's attention to the report a week or two ago from Windsor, Ont., that the Canadian excise authorities there were much distressed because of the heavy storage of spirituous liquors, nominally in preparation for shipment to the United States, se they believed that the whisky was merely to be taken into the river and brought back to Canada to supply the bootleggers who operate as profitably under the Canadian law as they do on the United States side of the boundary.

Some time in the course of a discussion of this difficult problem some speaker, well equipped with the facts, will demonstrate that the sale of alcoholic liquors always was a lawless trade, even when normally controlled and licensed by law. In most cities the saloon keener who obeyed the law relative to closing, selling drink to minors and women, etc., was so abnormal a figure as to earn local celebrity. The notorious and scandalous violation of the prohibition law is little more extended than were violations of the license laws of the various states when they were in existence. A trade which naturally tends to law breaking, and gathers about it in its centers of distribution men of lawless instincts, is in the end better prohibited, even though prohibition cannot be made complete, than licensed in order that its followers and practitioners may operate under the cloak of the law.

A "Border State's" Primaries

ENNESSEE'S recent primary elections apparently aroused little interest except in the Democratic gubernatorial contest. Nominees chosen by the two parties included the State's two Republican and eight Democratic congressmen, and its senior Senator, also a Democrat. A few partisans of the wet cause have pointed to the nomination of Governor Horton as favorable to the presidential candidacy of Governor Smith. As none of the major issues of the forthcoming national election was a factor except in the Second Congressional District, where a dry was nominated by the Democrats, the reason for such a claim is not

While considering this "border state," however, the wets might do well to review the national campaign issues most likely to dispel the apathy evident there in the primaries.

Although it is in the "solid South," Tennessee often has ignored party lines. From the mountainous regions, where some of the natives say "you 'uns," to the western plateau, where they say "you-all," voters have scratched their tickets on many occasions. Especially have they shown this tendency in instances when prohibition was

One of the most widespread divisions in the Democratic Party there came when state-wide prohibition was an issue; it resulted in the election of a Republican Governor, Ben W. Hooper, in 1910. The breach was so great that Governor Hooper won again in 1912. The election of Alfred A. Taylor as Governor in 1920 was due to many causes, including "Uncle Alf's" fiddle, and possibly even his widely known dog, old "Limber." Warren G. Harding received the electoral vote of Tennessee that year, polling 219,829 votes, to 206,558 for Cox and 2239 for Debs. The Democratic balloting in the recent primaries far exceeded that of the Republicans, but unofficial returns show that the total now pledged to support the Democratic nominees is less than half the vote cast when President Harding carried the State. The issues this year seem likely to swell the total vote beyond the 428,626 of 1920, and to cause more scratching of the party tickets.

Both the prohibition and the Tammany issues will be noticed more in Tennessee than in some other states. Bishop James Cannon, Dr. Arthur J. Barton and other southern dry leaders have strong personal followings there, particularly among members of their respective churches. This fact, added to the State's consistent support of prohibition legislation, will tend to focus attention on the liquor issue. As for Tammany leadership of the Democratic Party, the counsel of Wilson and Bryan, both almost revered in Tennessee, will not be entirely forgotten. Nothing in the primaries showed that the State either would or would not help to keep the South "solid." With the national issues certain to stir interest, every indication emphasizes Tennessee's position as a "border state" to be reckoned as doubtful when a wet candidate seeks its electoral vote.

A Turko-Bulgarian Pact

ATHANOS BOUROFF, the Bulgarian Minister of Foreign Affairs, has informed the Parliamentary Committee on Foreign Affairs that Bulgaria and Turkey are on the point of concluding a pact of friendship and arbitration.

This is the first agreement of such a character that Bulgaria has arranged with any of her neighbors since the war. She still feels that she has a grievance against Rumania, Greece and Jugoslavia, but her attitude toward Turkey is a different matter. To be sure, all of Bulgaria's folk songs, folk stories and national songs are directed against the Turks, who kept the Bulgarians in bondage 500 years. Also, Bulgaria is about to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of her liberation from Turkey. Still, all the hardships these songs, stories and celebrations commemorate are long since past and gone. Now a new Turkey has arisen, a fact which exercises a potent influence over most Bulgarians. Indeed, many of them greatly admire Turkey, and they feel that a formal pact of friendship with her would constitute another step toward Bulgarian rehabilitation and put an end to Bulgaria's isolation in the Balkans.

It is stated that this pact will be signed in the fall and duly presented to the League of Nations. Although the matter has not been officially given to the public, Bulgaria's most widely read paper has commented at length on the forthcoming agreement, and has stated that all circles in Bulgaria are highly pleased with the prospects of closer co-operation between Turkey and Bulgaria.

British Railway Agreement

THE unexpectedly quick conclusion of the British railway wages negotiations, resulting in an agreement containing several remarkable provisions, affords a further indication of the new industrial tendencies in Great Britain which have been so noticeable during the last year.

In both the method of approach to the issue raised by the companies and the conditions of the agreement there is a very definite departure from the traditions that have held sway throughout the period of machine industry in Great Britain. This is attributable partly to the lessons of 1926 and partly to the influence of the new co-operation movement initiated some months ago by Sir Josiah Stamp, the president of the executive of the London, Midland & Scottish Company. The significance of the agreement is increased when it is remembered that until just before the war the railway companies resolutely declined to recognize the railwaymen's trade unions.

When the companies were compelled to approach the unions a few weeks ago by the adverse economic conditions, and by a fall in revenue so great that it far more than counterbalanced the results of a sustained effort to reduce the operating costs, there was nothing in the proposals they submitted to indicate any material change from traditional methods. The claim was a drastic one, involving the abolition of all remaining cost-of-living bonuses and of special pay for overtime, night work and Sunday duty. In the existing national agreements the railway workers have gained a status akin to that of salaried employees, with guaranteed daily and weekly wages. By the companies' original proposals this status would have been seriously modified.

When the discussions opened, however, it soon became clear that the managers had one eye on a compromise bargain and the other on the possibility that the unions, by resisting concessions, would compel a reference of the claim to the conciliation boards, in which event a settlement could not have been reached until the late autumn. The willingness of the managers to accept much less than they had asked for, as the price of a quick settlement and an immediate realization of the savings in labor costs, was matched by the attitude of thought of the union leaders. Under the shrewd guidance of J. H. Thomas, general secretary of the National Union of Railwaymen, they reached a decision in their own counsels that in the financial situation of the railway service it was impossible to avoid either some reduction of wages and salaries or dismissals of workers on a large scale. Therefore, instead of resisting the proposals of the companies and trusting to the wages boards to modify the claim, they expressed readiness to meet the companies on the basis of reciprocal concessions. The result was that the original wide claim was transformed into a simple deduction of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent from gross earnings, and that for the first time an agreement with trade unions included a provision that the salaries of management should be subject to reduction, while an undertaking was given that the directors would make the same concession. Another unique feature of the agreement is a provision which will have the effect of utilizing part of the £3,000,000 saving yielded by the wage concession in order to provide one day's work more per week for many thousands of employees in the locomotive works, carriage works, and other general workshops of the companies, which have been running short time for some months past. This is described by J. H. Thomas as introducing a new sense of comradeship and community interest into industrial relations. There is little reason to doubt that, on the basis of good will established more firmly by this agreement, an enduring structure of co-operation can be erected.

"The Old Order Changeth"

N THE Aldwych site in London, where already stand Australia House, Bush House and the offices of the Marconi Company, is to be erected another great building, India House. This will contain, besides governmental and other offices connected with the Indian Commonwealth, two completely equipped native bazaars. The Londoner, if he can make the trip without inconvenience, will probably visit the bazaars once or twice soon after they have been opened. If they are selling goods that interest him, he will trade with them as he would do with any other store. But he will not get in any way excited about them. He has seen so much that is exotic in his city in recent years that an Indian bazaar more or less will leave him quite unmoved.

London, in truth, has become one of the great cosmopolitan cities of the world, and her development in this direction has been extremely rapid. In the childhood of men now barely middle-aged, she was a city so withdrawn, so triumphantly "English," that those strangers from other lands who were to be found in her seemed to be living furtively, apologetically amid surroundings in which they felt they had no rightful part. From the time the American, descending from the boat train, first encountered that pungent smell which marked all the London railway termini and drove to his hotel through gas-lit streets, musical with the clip-clop of hoofs, on to the time when he took his departure for Paris or Vienna or Rome or some city that did really seem to be part of Europe, he felt that he was visiting a remote island sunk in the depths of leagues of sea where travel was a genuine adventure and where anything might happen at any moment.

There is nothing apologetic in the bearing of the American tourist in London today. He swarms triumphantly, and is warmly welcomed by those who cater for him about the city. The Fleet Street hostelry, in the very heart of old London, where Doctor Johnson is supposed to have passed many convivial hours (though Boswell is curiously silent on the topic) is filled with the invaders, and the Bohemians and journalists who used to lunch there twenty years ago are fled-the Bohemians, or those who still remain, to the Savage Club, there to exchange unreliable reminiscences of the days when American tourists were not; the journalists, or those of them to whom the pace of modern Fleet Street is allowing any luncheon at all, to sit over a bun and a glass of milk in a tea shop.

As for the average man in the street, he preserves in the face of a char-à-bancs packed with school-teachers from every state from Maine to New Mexico that equanimity with which he receives far more bizarre spectacles. With the growth of the "Empire idea" almost every type of humanity may be seen walking the London streets: a Gold Coast chief waddling in richly gilt garments under a scarlet ceremonial umbrella; an Arab sheik in flowing white burnous; a trooper from the Canadian Northwest in crimson shirt with chain-mail shoulder straps and jingling spurs; while East Indians of every race from the tall white-turbaned Sikhs of the North to the little dark Cingalese of the extreme South are to be encountered everywhere. Sam Weller would have been tremendously excited at meeting a sheik in the Strand; among his descendantsso like him in fundamentals, so dissimilar in the outward expression of their everyday lives -scarcely a small boy bothers to turn his head.

Editorial Notes

"We cannot carry on, to paraphrase the words of the immortal Lincoln, half wet and half dry, half lawful and half unlawful," says Judge Austin E. Griffiths: That Abraham Lincoln never doubted the outcome of the momentous prohibition issue, however, was evidenced more than eighty-five years ago in his speech on "The Temperance Revolution," wherein he said:

Happy day when-all appetites controlled, all matter subjected-mind, all conquering mind, shall live and move, the monarch of the world. And when the tory shall be complete-when there shall be neither a slave nor a drunkard on the earth-how proud the title of that land which may truly claim to be the birthplace and the cradle of both those revolutions that shall have ended in that victory!

The United States defeats the British at their game of golf, and in the Olympic Games the British defeat the United States, after the latter had beaten/Canada, in the great American Indian game of lacrosse, which Canada has taken up as its national game. All of which simply shows that sometimes pupils are able to give their teachers a lesson in their own game.

A Yale professor points out that, "if private property depends for its safety upon superior force, nations have a new incentive to maintain such insurance as large military equipment is thought to provide." Obviously, however, few nations can have this type of insurance, and none can afford it.

One of the finest adjuncts of a vacation trip is a willingness to appreciate good qualities in other states and countries.

Camping Out With Archibald

T IS obvious that to spend the night in ordinary beds at an inn cannot in truth be called camping out. Nevertheless, and notwithstanding the thought of poor Marmaduke loaded for camping, standing lonely beneath a shed in the inn yard, our slumbers were exceedingly peaceful. I dimly remember Archibald saying something about an early morning start, but I don't think he really meant it. Otherwise he would have awakened in time to awaken me for breakfast instead of lunch. As it was, we ambled downstairs just in time for the midday meal served at the inn. An hour later, Archibald turned Marmaduke's head to the west, and we left Middle Wallop in its peaceful valley.

"Now," said Archibald, as he pressed his foot on the accelerator, "this is going to be a nonstop run to a genuine camping-out place.

"Good!" I said, "and where is it to be?"

"I haven't the remotest idea, but it's not going to be at an inn, cooped up in a stuffy room. We are equipped for real camping out, and I intend to camp out, if you follow me.

"Oh, willingly, that's what I came for. In fact, for the past three days I-"

"Well, it hasn't been my fault, has it?" interrupted Archibald. "We've tried, have we not?"

"And we'll try again," I said, dreamily. "Something tells me that tonight, we shall camp beside a pellucid stream under the canopy of a star-studded sky, with the song of the nightingale blending with the gentle rustle-'

1 1 1 "Did you think to get some cheese at the village store?" broke in Archibald.

'Cheese?" I said, still dreamily, "who wants cheese beside a pellucid stream under the canopy of-

"I do," said Archibald, "I am very fond of cheese especially when camping out. Was it not Omar Mac-Murphy, the Aberdeen Persian-Rug poet, who wrote:

A patch of cactus 'neath a bough, A hunk of bread and cheese and thou"?

"It must have been MacMurphy," I said, "and then, if I remember rightly, he added:

Thus served with mystic glamour of the East, The moldy lacteal bite becomes a feast." Archibald chuckled. "Not so bad, old chap," he said, 'I thought I was the only one who could quote Mac-

Murphy. However, since you have forgotten the cheese, we will strike it off the menu and stick to bacon and eggs. Now, let's get off this main road, and hunt for that pellucid stream. We found the stream after many miles of wandering amid a network of country lanes to the north of the main road. It was a charming stream whose pellucidity could not be doubted, but alas! it meandered through private domains on the wrong side of a hedge streaked with triple lines of barbed wire. We gazed through the hedge and listened to the rippling murmurs, barred from nearer approach not only by the fortified hedge, but by printed notices on the trees threatening prosecution to trespassers.

"So near and yet so far!" quoted Archibald. "It seems a pity that such a jolly little stream should be sentenced to solitary imprisonment. I dare say the owner has never pitched his tent nor burnt his bacon on its grassy banks. There it goes, singing along, inviting anyone to come in and play, and we can't accept.'

"Perhaps after serving its sentence, it is released further on," I said; "suppose we follow and see.'

We did, and it was. A few miles beyond the private domain, we came upon the stream again. It ran close beside the road with neither hedge nor fence to bar us from its invitation to stop and camp. With a chuckle of satisfaction, Archibald ran the car along the bank only a few rods from the road, and halted.

The collapsible stove was the first thing to receive Archibald's, attention, while I foraged for fuel wherewith to feed it. There was practically no dry wood on this side of the stream, but on the other side was a tangled wood of birch and pine. It was a shallow stream, and some distance away, round a bend, were bowlders which could be used as stepping-stones to cross. Leaving Archibald to assemble the stove, I made my way downstream to the bowlders, crossed, and entered the woods. It was a damp tangle of trees, rather swampy under foot, and it took me some little time to collect an armful of dead branches dry enough to burn. Recrossing the stream finally with my precious cargo of fuel, I hurried toward the camp, for I knew Archibald would be anxious to get the camp fire started. As I rounded the bend, I saw Archibald standing in the road gazing at a horse-drawn vehicle slowly disappearing in the distance. "There you are," I said, casting my heavy burden of fuel down by the stove. "Start the home fire burning, and I'll go back for another load."

"Don't trouble, old chap," said Archibald, approaching, 'the jolly old cupboard is bare, and so we poor dogs have

"What do you mean?" Archibald pointed to the disappearing vehicle. "Poor old duffer, wife, six assorted children, two dogs and a pet rabbit—trekking down into Devonshire to see if he can get a job on a farm-not a beggar, mind you; but those assorted kiddies looked hungry-well, I couldn't-eryou understand-

"Quite," I said. "Collapse the faithful stove and let's trek along to the next town and fill up the cupboard again. It will be daylight for several hours yet.' Archibald sighed as he turned Marmaduke away from the friendly stream. It was the nearest we had yet come to camping out. The next town proved to be a village, a quaint, little place, consisting of an ancient church, a general store, a blacksmith's forge, and a few oak-beamed cottages, all ranged round a green.

Our approach to the village was by way of a steeply descending lane in which generations of farm wagons had worn deep unpleasant ruts, and in consequence our entrance into the village partook of the sensational. Something snapped in the steering gear, and poor Marmaduke left to its own directing, lost his head, dashed madly across the green and all but deposited us in the horse pond before Archibald could apply the brake. As it was, we halted with front wheels in the water. 1 1 1

The sleepy little village woke up. It is probable that nothing so exciting had happened there for many moons. Several people emerged from the general store, the blacksmith left his forge, and the oldest inhabitant hurried toward us. Willing hands shoved Marmaduke away from the pond, and Archibald and the blacksmith were quickly on their knees seeking for the trouble beneath the steering wheel. They soon found it-a rod had snapped-nothing serious-nothing beyond the blacksmith's skill to set right again, but-it would take time, we could not go on until the next day.

Archibald and I took counsel together. There was no inn in the village—what was to be done? We had about concluded to unship the collapsible tent and set it up on the green, when from the garden of an old, vine-covered house next to the church, a white-haired man emerged and came over to the group about the car. His ecclesiastical dress proclaimed him the vicar, and it took him but a few moments to understand the situation.

"Camp out on the green?" he exclaimed to Archibald. You must not think of it, my dear sir-in fact, I won't allow it. Come with me, both of you-there is more than one extra room in my rambling, old vicarage, and I shall esteem it a favor if you will stay with me overnight. We thanked the vicar for his kind invitation, but explained that ours was a camping-out tour. "No doubt," said the vicar, "but for this once camp in and I will endeavor to make it a pleasant change for you. Change! I looked at Archibald who smiled sadly. It was the Smithers situation all over again. But there was something rather appealing in the vicar's attitude. Perhaps he was lonely and desired companionship. This idea must have occurred to Archibald also, for he ceased protesting and accepted the vicar's hospitality. Leaving Marmaduke to the care of the blacksmith, we accompanied our new friend to the vicarage. It was a quaint old house in which the vicar lived alone attended by a servant or two. Behind the house was an Old World garden with a flower-bordered lawn which swept down to a placid stream, and here the vicar left us while he saw to the preparation of our rooms. At the sight of the stream, I gave a little gasp of delight.

"It's the same stream that invited us to camp!" I said to Archibald. "Did I not say that we would sleep tonight beside a pellucid stream under the canopy of-

"You said 'camp,' not sleep," interrupted Archibald, "and where's your nightingale? I tell you, old chap, it's all wrong, we are not out for this kind of thing. If the vicar wasn't such a dear old boy, I'd-" The return of the vicar left Archibald's sentence unfinished.

In that mysterious receptacle called memory there are little nooks where we store away treasured scenes and episodes which in times of reverie we take out and contemplate again with pleasure. Such an episode was our sojourn with the kindly vicar in his ancient home: It happened that in his younger days he had camped many times in the heart of Africa in the course of his mission work there, and as he sat after dinner at the chessboard with Archibald he told us of his adventures in the wilds.

"We didn't camp just for pleasure in those days," he said, "and we never refused an indoor bed when it was offered," he added, with a gentle smile. It was late when we retired to our rooms, and it was later still before we went to bed, for the nightingale did come after all, and sang for a long time in an old elm tree by the stream.

"That's the drawback to camping out in England," said Archibald before he got into bed, "there's too much comfort, not enough roughing it-we allow the-er-fleshpots of Egypt to outweigh our primitive inclinations—we isten too much to the siren voices of four-walled inclosures when the great outdoors is calling! Tomorrow we will turn over a lew neaf-er-I mean a new leaf, and-erwhat do you suppose I bought that camp outfit for anyway? Tomorrow we will use it, or-or-"

"Quite so, old chap," I said, vawning. "I agree with you absolutely—absolutely, but just at present let's be grateful and—er—go to bed."

'Good night," said Archibald, "but remember, no more of this de luxe business—tomorrow, bright and early, early, mind you, we hit the trail!"

"Friend India"

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

In reading Marc T. Greene's article entitled "Friend I have been surprised at certain statements of his which I feel are not altogether correct. I have had a close view of what he saw superficially, having lived twenty-three years in India. My father gave thirty-six years, and my husband thirty years of devoted service to that country. I should like to correct from experience the impression that certain of Mr. Greene's words must have had on readers of the Monitor.

Had he alighted from that train, and traveled in bullock cart or on camel away from the more-or-less civilized area of road, railway line and telegraph post he would undoubtedly have come on white men who for many years have lived in isolation, their tents moving with them from one desolate spot to another as they minister to the needs of the villages in their district.

Many serious problems confront the white man in India, be he viceroy or merely a self-sacrificing member of that Indian Civil Service which Lloyd George declared was the steel framework of the administrative structure of the Government of India. It has to be remembered that India's immensity, her diversity of caste, creed language and custom have caused every reform to be met with vigorous opposition from the Indians themselves. To lead these illiterate and often hostile millions of people to higher ideals is no easy task. work and who never complain or proclaim their doings, that I write to refute Mr. Greene's charge that "there is no evidence that any European gives the least heed" to the poor in rural India. I have met and known many such noble administrators of the Indian Government, and many white women also who have ministered to Indians. London, Eng.

"Prohibition Fruitage"

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

Your splendid series on "Prohibition Fruitage" prompts me to recount an experience which I had recently in a Canadian city some 500 miles north of the border. In this place there are many saloons doing a thriving business, and each is surrounded by a group of loafers, while the air in the vicinity is strong with the smell of stale beer

A resident official of the United States Government remarked that many Americans visiting the city told-him they had forgotten what the saloons meant to the community, although it is only ten years since there were many of them in the United States. Several persons, he said, have admitted they were against prohibition, and would have voted against it had they not seen what a return of the saloons would mean. Once again to be confronted with such a condition convinced them of the rightness of prohibition.

So far my information was secondhand, but I had a first-hand discussion on my journey south. A gentleman from Minneapolis expressed himself freely to me as having been opposed to prohibition until he saw again the effect of saloons. For the sake of his children and womenfolk alone, he said, he would stand for prohibition in future, and he was glad the United States had taken the lead in abolishing legally the sale of alcohol.

A Tribute and a Forecast

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR: In John Maynard Keynes's book, "The Economic Consequences of the Peace," page 273, occur these words; Europe, too, should never forget the extraordinary assistance afforded her during the first six months of 1919 through the agency of Mr. Hoover and the American Commission of Relief. Never was a nobler work of disinterested good will carried through with more tenacity and sincerity and skill, and with less thanks either asked or given. The ungrateful governments of Europe owe much more to the statesmanship and insight of Mr. Hoover and his band of American workers than they have yet appreciated or will ever acknowledge.

And in a footnote on the next page, he continues:

Mr. Hoover was the only man who emerged from the ordeal of Paris with an enhanced reputation. This complex personality, . . . his eyes steadily fixed on the true and essential facts of the European situation, imported into the councils of Paris, when he took part in them, precisely that atmosphere of reality, knowledge, magnanimity and disinterestedness which, if they had been found in other quarters also, would have given us the Good Peace.

Are the men and women of this country who lived through the dark days of 1917-1919 going to forget next November what Herbert Hoover meant to the world then, and what he will mean to the whole world in the future if his fellow citizens give him the place of power he seeks and deserves? No, those of us who fought the war in the kitchen and counting house have not forgotten and never
